

PODCASTS

Building a commodity trading business: rewards and risks

The HC Insider Podcast - Episode 16

16 SEPTEMBER 2020

In part one of a two part series, founding partner of Energex and former Co-Head of Morgan Stanley's commodity business, Colin Bryce, joins us to discuss building a commodities trading platform and dispel some of the myths.

2020 has highlighted how trading platforms can protect natural resource producers price shocks and boost earnings through extracting more value from the products and with better reach into the market place. Those oil majors with trading groups have significantly outperformed their peers without. With producers of natural resources around the world building or retooling trading platforms in response, it is a good time to consider what a trading business is, what it can offer and what factors lead to success or disaster. Colin and his partners at Energex draw on their real world experience at the very top level in this industry to help organisations master this difficult business and he shares his insight with us.

The HC Insider Podcast

Each day, around the world, we have fascinating one-on-one conversations with our connections. Our collaborators are uniquely informed, creative and inspirational in their fields. We want to provide our community a seat alongside us, listening in to these conversations in that special way podcasting provides, as we tackle topical and people related issues with the leaders and leading minds in our sector.

This article was produced as part of HC Insider. HC Insider is Human Capital's dedicated media service. In addition to providing subscribers with relevant and informative editorials, we also report on people moves in the energy and natural resource world.

To receive free HC Insider alerts to your desktop or mobile, sign up here.

About Human Capital

Established in 2003, Human Capital identifies and recruits business-critical talent for organisations involved in the energy, mining, agriculture and nutrition supply chains.

From our offices in London, Geneva, Houston, Hong Kong, Singapore, São Paulo and Sydney, we have built our high reputation on delivering quality professional search services across multiple product, functional and regional markets.