

PODCASTS

04 NOVEMBER 2020

Natural gas is becoming big business in China. China is expected to become the world's largest LNG importer in the next two years and ongoing deregulation is creating opportunity for incumbents and new entrants alike.

In 2020, we saw the creation of PipeChina to further streamline the market's transportation and distribution. It is also a unique market with differences at the political, regulatory and market structure level - LNG is trucked around the country! Is it the next big trading opportunity in natural gas? Will it go on to dominate the LNG import market? Joining us to discuss this fascinating market and its future is Mark Lay, Deputy General Manager of Derivatives Trading at ENN - the country's largest publicly traded utility and natural gas distributor.

The HC Insider Podcast

Each day, around the world, we have fascinating one-on-one conversations with our connections. Our collaborators are uniquely informed, creative and inspirational in their fields. We want to provide our community a seat alongside us, listening in to these conversations in that special way podcasting provides, as we tackle topical and people related issues with the leaders and leading minds in our sector.

This article was produced as part of HC Insider. HC Insider is Human Capital's dedicated media service. In addition to providing subscribers with relevant and informative editorials, we also report on people moves in the energy and natural resource world.

To receive free HC Insider alerts to your desktop or mobile, sign up here.

About Human Capital

Established in 2003, Human Capital identifies and recruits business-critical talent for organisations involved in the energy, mining, agriculture and nutrition supply chains.

From our offices in London, Geneva, Houston, Hong Kong, Singapore, São Paulo and Sydney, we have built our high reputation on delivering quality professional search services across multiple product, functional and regional markets.